A Zoom presentation

Mark Twain famously said, "Buy land. They aren't making more of it." From the beginning most Americans owned land. Well into the nineteenth-century American land was available and cheap, allowing more adult men to own land than practically anywhere else in the world.

American land records and deeds often link one generation to another. Learn how to follow land transfers to discover valuable genealogical information about male and female land-owning ancestors.

Sandra Schaad, MA, CSCS, is a former figure skater turned avid genealogist with deep roots in nine of the American colonies. Sandra specializes in Lineage and Southern genealogical research. She holds an AA in Family History Studies (Genealogy) from Monterey Peninsula College and is in the process of becoming an Accredited Genealogist [AG]. She is fluent in German and has traced her father's paternal German ancestry to 1608.

Our meetings are free and open to the public.
